Things to think about when shooting the video

Framing Shots with the Rule of Thirds

Placing the focal point of your image in the dead center can be disconcerting. Imagine a tic-tac-toe pattern drawn over a frame, use one of the four points where the lines intersect to place the focal point(s) of the shot.

The focal point of a human subject is generally the head or eyes, depending on how the camera is zoomed, and is often placed along the top horizontal imaginary line.

Because the video is maybe viewed in a small window on computer, it is good to stay tight on your subject. If your subject is frequently gesturing or otherwise using body language to convey her point, you will want to zoom out in order to catch this additional communication.
